Comments: I'm sure you're well aware of PETA's notice about your policy change, or lack thereof, so I'm going to make this short. I don't have many taxes held back, because my family is low income, but to think that any of my money goes toward any kind of animal testing, "vaccinations", etc. angers me. I don't think America has enough money to waste on things such as this. If you would not like these experiments, tests, or living conditions for yourselves or your families, why would the ICCVAM throw away precious dollars on treating animals this way? There are other, more conclusive means for research, etc. out there, already in use in Europe, and many companies in the US. I am a pet owner, and I cannot imagine some of these things happening to them - Katze and Shadow are my children. I'm sure all those bunnies, pigs, kitties, and other animals have families too, if only within their species. What if this really were our children? Please consider this; consider the people and their emotions, the animals and their emotions, and where our country is going, if your five year plan does not go in a different direction very soon.
